Tibet after Empire
LIRI Seminar
Proceedings Series

Edited by

LUMBINI INTERNATIONAL RESEARCH INSTITUTE

Volume 4
Tibet after Empire
Culture, Society and Religion between 850-1000

Proceedings of the Seminar Held in Lumbini, Nepal, March 2011

Edited by CHRISTOPH CÜPPERS, ROBERT MAYER and
MICHAEL WALTER

Lumbini International Research Institute
Lumbini 2013
CONTENTS

HENK BLEZER
The World According to the rMa Family 1

CATHY CANTWELL AND ROB MAYER
Representations of Padmasambhava in early post-Imperial Tibet 19

BRANDON DOTSON
The Dead and their Stories 51

GUNTRAM HAZOD
The Plundering of the Tibetan Royal Tombs 85

AMY HELLER
Observations on Painted Coffin Panels of the Tibetan Empire 117

NATHAN W. HILL
‘Come as Lord of the Black-headed’ 169

BIANCA HORLEMANN
Tang Dynasty (618–907) Sources for Tibetan Empire Studies: A Bibliographic Essay 181

MAHO IUCHI
Early bKa’ gdam pa masters and Khams ’Dan ma 215

SAMTEN G. KARMAY
A Recently Discovered rnam thar of Lha Bla ma Ye shes ’od 229

DAN MARTIN
The Highland Vinaya Lineage 239

KLAUS-DIETER MATHES
bKa’ brgyud Mahāmudrā 267
CARMEN MEINERT
Assimilation and Transformation of Esoteric Buddhism in Tibet and China 295

DIETER SCHUH
Zwischen Großreich und Phyi-dar 313

PÉTER-DÁNIEL SZÁNTÓ
Before a Critical Edition of the Sampuṭa 343

LOPON P. OGYAN TANZIN
The Six Greatnesses of the Early Translations according to Rong-zom Mahāpanḍita 367

ROBERTO VITALI
Khams in the Context of Tibet’s post Imperial Period 393

MICHAEL WALTER
Analysis of PT016/IO751
– Language and Culture of a Dunhuang document, part one 417 REPRESENTATIONS OF PADMASAMBHAVA IN EARLY POST-IMPERIAL TIBET

CATHY CANTWELL AND ROB MAYER

Introduction

When did the person of Padmasambhava first become incorporated into tantric ritual, and when did the exalted status for which he is now so well known first become evident? For Tibetan tradition, the answers are simple. Padmasambhava was a peerless guru with the vidyādhara’s control over lifespan, who became revered in Tibet after the emperor Khri Srong de’u btsan (r. 755/6-797) invited him there in the late eighth century—by which time he had already been a living legend in India for many centuries. Modern academics are of course denied such beautiful and easy answers. In general, we are permitted to accept as valid evidence far less data than traditional Tibetan historians, and in few places is this felt more acutely than in the history of Padmasambhava. In the usages of modern scholarship, the admissible historical evidence for the person of Padmasambhava, or even for his representations, is very slight indeed. Fortunately however, following the digitisation of the Dunhuang texts over the last decade, we have recently seen a small augmentation of the available early evidence for the representations of the great guru in tantric literature, even if not for the enigmatic master himself. Part of this augmentation has come from the discovery of a new Dunhuang textual source, and part from a more intensive analysis of already known Dunhuang textual sources. However, we are not convinced that the implications of the new source have so far been fully appreciated, nor that the bigger picture as it should now stand has been properly assessed. In this paper we present a more thorough interrogation of the new source of evidence, together with a further investigation of the already known sources, to arrive at a more complete depiction of what we can now know about the prehistory of Padmasambhava’s early representation, if we put all the available evidence together. Some of our thinking on Padmasambhava in the Dunhuang sources has already been published elsewhere, so that we will only recapitulate it briefly here, while other material will be presented here for the first time.¹

texts comes from Matthew Kapstein. Writing in 2000, the only admissible evidence then available to him was fourfold:

i) The early historical text, the Testament of Ba,\(^3\) which presents Padmasambhava visiting Tibet.

ii) The 10th century Dunhuang text PT44, which narrates Padmasambhava bringing the Vajrakīlāya\(^4\) tradition to Tibet.

iii) An early text attributed to Padmasambhava, the Man ngag lta 'phreng, and a commentary on it by the eleventh century rNyin ma sage, Rong zom Chos kyi bzang po (exact dates unknown).

iv) The gter mas of Nyang ral (1124-1192) and Guru Chos dbang (1212-1270), which presented fully-fledged apotheoses of Padmasambhava as a fully-enlightened Buddha.

Based on this evidence, Kapstein concluded that:

i) The Testament of Ba shows Padmasambhava quite likely did visit Tibet during Khri Srong de’u btsan’s reign.

ii) PT44 indicates followers of his tantric teachings were active in post-Imperial Tibet.

iii) Rong zom’s commentary and the few Dunhuang references show that the Padmasambhava cult began its ascent during the ‘time of fragments’, between the end of Empire in the mid-\(^9\)th century and the start of the gsar ma period in the late \(^10\)th century.

iv) Nyang ral and Chos dbang’s treasure texts suggest the most massive elaboration of Padmasambhava’s cult developed from the 12th century.\(^5\)

Since Kapstein published that in 2000, there have been two further developments. Firstly, a new Dunhuang source mentioning Padmasambhava, PT307, was felicitously discovered by Jacob Dalton in the course of his cataloguing work for the British

---

\(^2\) Much of the most important work on Padmasambhava was done at the EPHE in Paris over many years by Anne-Marie Blondeau, who has now been succeeded by another scholar with an interest in Padmasambhava, Matthew Kapstein. See Kapstein 2000: 155-160.

\(^3\) This famous early history comes in various different redactions, and also has different spellings, notably dBa’ bzhed, sBa bzhed, and rBa bzhed.

\(^4\) While the correct Sanskrit name is Vajrakīla, the tradition acquired a new take on its Indic name in Tibet: from the tenth century Dunhuang texts until today, Tibetans have normatively and consistently referred to it in transliteration as Vajrakīlāya, and only rarely as Vajrakīla. Even that arch Indophile and Sanskritist, the famous Sa skya Paṅjīta Kun dga’ rgyal mtshan (1182–1251), used the form Vajrakīlāya rather than Vajrakīla in his seminal edition of the short phur pa tantra that was included in the Kanjur (rDo rje phur pa rtsa ba’i rgyud kyi dum bu; all editions we have been able to consult are agreed on Vajrakīlāya). Hence, when referring to the greatly expanded Tibetan branch of the tradition as opposed to the smaller Indian tradition, one may advisedly employ the Tibetan name Vajrakīlāya, rather than the Indian name Vajrakīla.

\(^5\) Kapstein, op.cit. p. 157
Library. Dalton subsequently published an article on PT307 and on another Dunhuang text, TibJ644.6 Secondly, the present authors have completed a much more detailed analysis than has hitherto been attempted of the evidence for Padmasambhava from the Dunhuang text IOLTibJ 321, looking at it more carefully than Eastman’s short note from the 1980s, Dalton’s brief summary in 2004, or van Schaik’s small blog entry in 2007 (Cantwell and Mayer 2012: 87-98). It is largely these two sources of evidence that will inform the present article, together with a reassessment of the already well-known sources PT44 and the Testament of Ba.

However, we must first digress upon a quick disambiguation. Those who have read his work will be aware that Jacob Dalton had initially hoped that he had found two new Dunhuang references to Padmasambhava, not merely one, and proposed a further text, IOLTibJ644, as a description of Padmasambhava in the Asura Cave at Pharping (Dalton, op.cit). Unfortunately however, as Dalton himself points out, IOLTibJ644 nowhere mentions Padmasambhava by name, and as we have shown elsewhere, there are further grounds to doubt that it is necessarily referring to Padmasambhava at all. For present purposes, we are best advised to leave it aside, pending further investigation.7

So what can the new and fully admissible evidence tell us that is different from what Kapstein wrote in 2000? It is a tribute to the discipline of his historical reasoning, and the restraint with which his analysis neither exceeded nor underrated the scanty evidence, that the advances we can now report consist more of filling in additional details, rather than revising his basic outlines. Kapstein wisely attempted no definite dates for any particular aspect of the Padmasambhava cult, which he portrayed as a gradual process developing throughout the post-imperial period, coming to some sort

---

7 For a discussion of these issues, see Mayer 2007. Dalton was right in saying that the relevant passage does occur within the general type of literature within which one might expect to find mentions of Padmasambhava, since it deals with the vidyādhara levels of the different yānas as later enumerated by the rNying ma pa. Yet the actual passage in question pertains specifically to a vidyādhara level attained through Kriyā tantra known as the sa la gnas pa ’i rig ’dzin, and is of a type found in other Kriyā tantra passages. Its themes of Vajrapāṇi, asura caves, miraculously-linked divine rivers flowing between Meru and the asura’s and nāga’s miraculous underground of pātāla, and magic sacraments of immortality, were popular in Kriyā tantras and other Indic literatures of that time, appearing also in Chinese texts. So this passage, expounding Kriyātantra terminology and nowhere mentioning Padmasambhava, might simply be a generic Kriyā tantra description, and might have nothing to do with Padmasambhava at all. Dalton’s identification was based on the assumption that the mention of an asura cave and the magic springs of Aśvakarna (a mountain or range in Abhidharma cosmology) should most likely signify Padmasambhava, since the Padmasambhava narratives in the dBa’ bzhes and in PT44 have similar motifs. But there remains some risk that his analysis did not take sufficient account of the fact that these types of motifs are widespread in Buddhist Kriyā tantras both Indic and Chinese, as also in Hindu purāṇic literature, for example, so that until a better analysis is achieved, the passage cannot be reliably taken as evidence for Padmasambhava.
of culmination with Nyang ral three centuries later. What is new is that we now have much stronger evidence that reverence for Padmasambhava, his incorporation into ritual, and—it seems—even his apotheosis, began closer to the beginning of the lengthy time frame Kapstein suggested than to its end. Our new evidence suggests that Padmasambhava already figured in religious myth and ritual, and was probably even seen as the enlightened source of tantric scriptures, as many as two hundred years before Nyang ral. In other words, when portraying Padmasambhava in his famous hagiographical and historical writings, it seems clear that Nyang ral was developing existent themes, as much as inventing new ones. With the benefit of hindsight, such an early inclusion of Padmasambhava in myth and ritual does not really seem surprising: as the figure par excellence who tamed and controlled all indigenous deities in the name of Buddhism, Padmasambhava is by the same token the figure who made it safe for converts to abandon their ancestral gods without fear of divine retribution. If Padmasambhava had not existed, it could be that some one performing a similar role might have to have been introduced. An important proviso is that we have not yet ascertained if the new evidence bears witness to a widespread cult of Padma in the tenth century, or something far narrower, followed only by a few. This is because the evidence currently available suggests two differing views of Padma, even within the comparatively narrow confines of the early proto-rNying ma tantric sources:

- Firstly, in the context of the possibly early- or mid-10th century rDzogs chen-oriented bSam gtan mig sgron of gNubs Sangs rgyas ye shes, he is cited as a great teacher and even mythologised, but no more so than his peers such as Vimalamitra, and there is no sign of his integration into ritual (although that might not be expected in a text of this genre).
- Secondly, in the Mahāyoga manuscripts from Dunhuang that were probably calligraphed in late tenth century but which might or might not represent significantly earlier compositions, he is mythologised, incorporated into ritual, and elevated above his peers, even apotheosized. The available versions of the Testament of Ba seem broadly to concur with this.

Jacob Dalton has in the last five years emerged as a much cited interpreter of the early rNying ma pa, and is widely renowned as a highly enterprising, thought-provoking and imaginative scholar. He has recognised, as many others such as Blondeau and Kapstein did before him, that there is real evidence for Padmasambhava from the 10th century or earlier. However, as we have pointed out elsewhere, Dalton’s work in this instance (Dalton 2004) reproduces or even multiplies the oversight of some previous scholarship in not taking adequate account of the domain of ritual, including the quite explicitly ritual functions of much of the Dunhuang material relating to 8 The dates of gNubs Sangs rgyas ye shes are still a matter for debate. We currently prefer the later dates as supported by Karmay 1988: 101.

---

Padmasambhava. As a result, he did not notice the extraordinary continuities that these Dunhuang texts on Padmasambhava have with contemporary Padmasambhava ritual—yet it is these continuities in the realm of ritual which in fact constitute amongst their most important data for historians. One cannot fully understand the historical significance of these texts without understanding two things: (i) that they themselves quite explicitly pertain to ritual, and (ii) the striking way in which their narratives and themes persist into the later ritual tradition, even into many of its very most popular modern expressions. Dalton did not really appreciate either of these two points. By approaching them once again merely as historical narratives rather than as texts from the domain of ritual, thus failing to notice their remarkably close continuities with later and contemporary Mahāyoga ritual, Dalton arrived at some conclusions that we believe are inaccurate. In particular, he largely misconstrued the evidence to support his central yet flawed theses, that these specific Dunhuang texts were fundamentally discontinuous in narrative structure with the later Tibetan tradition, and that in them, Padmasambhava was not portrayed as a uniquely important figure. While we entirely agree with him that Padmasambhava’s role expanded over time, we do not agree with him that the two texts under consideration, PT307 and IOLTibJ321, are discontinuous in narrative structure with the later tradition, nor that they show Padmasambhava in anything other than an already thoroughly glorified ritual role. It could be argued that some of the more historically oriented modern scholarship on tantrism has perhaps been insufficiently informed by an appreciation of ritual practice, including some of the previous work on the Dunhuang sources. The potential ritual evidence for the Padmasambhava cult in the Dunhuang sources is in fact considerably more significant than has so far been recognised, and also suggestive of rather different historical conclusions than have hitherto been drawn.

---

10 An influential strand within anthropology, a primary discipline for the understanding of ritual, has from the outset taken as fundamental to its methodology the minute study of ritual performances and the practice of participant observation. Anyone who was really familiar with contemporary popular rNyung ma ritual would swiftly recognise the remarkable and unmistakeable continuities between the Dunhuang Padmasambhava texts and modern ritual—yet it took modern scholarship decades to make this connection, preoccupied as it was with the historiographic record. Tantrism is primarily a ritual system, and ritual is essentially performative in nature, so that much of the most significant data about tantrism is recorded largely in its ritual record. It follows that an appreciation of tantrism’s performative aspects is indispensable to its understanding. Much the same can also be said about Mahāyāna Buddhism, so that Paul Harrison of Stanford University learned the Diamond Sūtra by heart and recited it daily to introduce into his philological research on that text a much needed performative understanding. In similar spirit, philologists and historians of tantrism will benefit if they study ritual manuals in great detail, attend occasional performances of rituals, and perhaps even participate in them now and again to gain a more complete and nuanced understanding.
IOLTibJ321, the Thabs kyi zhags pa and its commentary

Let us begin with IOLTibJ321. One of the most remarkable finds from Dunhuang, this manuscript in eighty-five folios\(^{11}\) comprises a complete rNying ma Mahāyoga tantra embedded within its commentary, further embellished with many marginal notes. The tantra is a famous one, still a mainstay of the rNying ma canon and found also in several Kanjurs, called The Noble Noose of Methods, a Lotus Garland Synopsis (’Phags pa thabs kyi zhags pa padma ’phreng gi don bsdus pa). We have been editing and studying the tantra and its commentary since 2006 (see Cantwell and Mayer 2012). Current palaeographical opinion locates the Dunhuang manuscript to the latter half of the tenth century, although our critical edition can demonstrate with reasonable certainty that an archetypal ancestor was older than the Dunhuang text by two copyings at the very least (Cantwell and Mayer, in press: 32-33).\(^{12}\)

The Dunhuang manuscript mentions Padmasambhava four times: once in the marginal notes at the beginning, twice in the marginal notes near the end, and once within the main text of the commentary itself, also near the end. The references are somewhat enigmatic, and we have published on them at greater length elsewhere (Cantwell and Mayer 2012:91-98), so here we will only review our findings in brief. Eastman, in the 1980s, was the first to look at these references, and tentatively suggested they might be presenting Padmasambhava as the human author of the commentary. Dalton and van Schaik follow him in taking much the same line, albeit more strongly.\(^{13}\)

\(^{11}\) The folios are numbered up to 84, but there is an extra unnumbered folio so there are eighty-five folios in total.

\(^{12}\) There is evidence relating to the actual document—the anomalies in chapter numbering and in the presentation of marginal notes—which show the manuscript must have been copied more than once. There is also evidence from the textual content. The Dunhuang ms. already has numerous scribal errors, some of them shared indicatively with specific strands of the extant transmission, others not. The density and layering of such scribal errors in the Dunhuang ms. indicate some transmissional distance from the archetype, but of course it is in most cases logically unsound to attempt any but the most trivial temporal conclusions purely from transmissional distance; two copyings could occur in a month, or over a century or more. The very old local Kanjurs or Kanjur fragments of Hemis and Bathang provided key testimony to our stemmatic analysis of the root text, as did the Tawang O rgyan gling Kanjur of 1699, and the three South Central Tibetan NGB editions of gTing skyes, Rig ’dzin and Kathmandu. See Cantwell and Mayer, 2012.

\(^{13}\) Eastman himself expressed some caution, finally concluding, “It appears... that we have one of the few surviving works of Padmasambhava” (1983: 50, our emphasis). In their catalogue, Dalton and van Schaik, however, simply list Padmasambhava as the author of IOL Tib 321, with no equivocations. See Dalton and van Schaik 2006: 51, or the online version of the catalogue at [http://idp.bl.uk/database/oo_loader.a4d?pm=IOL Tib J 321](http://idp.bl.uk/database/oo_loader.a4d?pm=IOL Tib J 321). This unequivocal assertion of authorship by Padmasambhava then continues throughout Dalton and van Schaik’s further individual writings on IOLTibJ321 as well.
another, none of the above scholars could afford the leisure to study the text in much depth or for very long, and none have written more than a few pages on it on any one occasion. After a much more laborious study, it now appears altogether uncertain that Padmasambhava is being represented as the human author of the commentary. Rather, there is a distinct emphasis on portraying him as a sublime realised being with exceptional access to the tathāgata’s secret teachings, and quite possibly even as the source of the root tantra itself.

The references the manuscript makes to Padmasambhava are not entirely clear and unambiguous, since they assume the reader already knows such information, but what is clear and unambiguous is that these are references to an exceptional, mytho-logized being, and not to an ordinary human teacher. At its end, the main text of the commentary lavishly praises Padmasambhava as Padma rgyal po, the ‘Lotus King’, in verses which the accompanying marginal notes explain are being addressed by Śāntigarbha to Padmasambhava. It is fascinating that these verses use a precise form of laudatory words picked up two centuries later by Nyang ral Nyi ma’i ’od zer and the wider hagiographical tradition in their own praises of Padmasambhava, and Nyang ral again specifically links these particular words to Padma rgyal po, a form which still remains canonical as one of the famous Eight Aspects of Guru Rinpoche (gu ru mtshan brgyad). [See figure 1][]

Final Verse of the Commentary to the ‘Phags pa thabs kyi zhags pa padma ‘phreng gi don bsdus pa (Dunhuang manuscript IOL Tib J 321 [Ms], f.84r; bsTan ’gyur: Golden [Gt] rgyud ’grel Bu, 78321, Peking [Qt] rgyud ’grel Bu, 129b, sNar thang [Nt] rgyud Bu 228)

Nyang ral, Nyi ma ’od zer Slob dpon padma ’byung gnas kyi skyes rabs chos ’byung nor bu ’i phreng ba zhes bya ba, rnam thar zangs gling ma (based primarily on the Kathmandu National Archives manuscript in dbu med (IMG_1670+1671, reel E2703/10, f.16r.5-16v.1).[]

14 Lewis Doney of the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London, has worked on critically editing Nyang ral’s Guru Padma hagiography. He argues convincingly that the earliest and historically most influential recension is that represented by two manuscripts in the National Archives in Kathmandu and two manuscripts from Bhutan, which he classifies as ZL3. The version of ZL3 used here is Lewis Doney’s discovery in the Kathmandu National Archives. We have emended rtog in line 2 to rtogs, found in all the other witnesses of ZL3. The Rin chen gter mdzod chen mo version (Paro: Ngodrup and Sherab Drimay, Kyichu Monastery, 1976, Volume Ka: 25), which has more recently become the most widely used version, incorporates later material. It gives a variant second line (rtogs ba bla med mchog tu gyur pa yis/) for this verse.
The verses say that Sam bha ba is “he who has attained the supreme siddhi, of great wonder, Padma rGyal po [The Lotus King] (who) is not worldly; (he who) unravels from the expanse the tathāgata’s great secret pith instructions”. The marginal notes attached here are slightly ambiguous, explaining that after examination, Śāntigarbha finds either Padmasambhava himself, or his teachings, flawless, and is praising him.¹⁵ Right at the start of the text, the marginal notes already told us that while the Buddha has condensed [the meanings] of the root text (’bu tas bsdus), it was Sambhava who produced or made [them] (sam ba bhas byas)—a similar meaning to Śāntigarbha’s praise of him here for unravelling the secret great pith instructions of the tathāgata from the expanse. Finally, right at the end of the root tantra, a marginal note might possibly explain that what has gone before, namely the speech of the tantra, was revealed by Padmasambhava without any personal fabrication or rang gzo, and there follows an explanation of how, when a noble being speaks with pure awareness, the resulting utterance is tantra.¹⁶ Thus, Padmasambhava is closely involved with the Buddha’s original teaching of the tantra, in terms that go some distance to making him sound like a treasure revealer of some kind. This has caused us to speculate that the name ‘Padma’ in the titles of the texts might conceivably be considered to refer to Padmasambhava; yet, if such an interpretation is in fact intended by the commentary (let alone the root text), it is certainly never stated explicitly.

---

¹⁵ slobs dpon shan ting gar bas brtags nas ma nor nas/ sam ba bha la stod pa ’o/ (f.84r.5)

¹⁶ (pad ma sam ba bhas rang gz[or?] byas pa ma yin bar ston, 83v.6). We presently think that since this comment follows the end of the root text, it might be commenting on Padmasambhava’s relation to the root text rather than merely the final line in the text relating to the mandala dissolution, especially since the commentary goes on to link the final teaching on natural emanation and reabsorption to the production of the tantra (given this natural emergence out of sameness, when, with pure awareness, the noble being speaks, the sound is tantra...). So it may be suggesting that the speech of the tantra is naturally emanated rather than idiosyncratically produced by Padmasambhava, although it has to be said that the comment is certainly not unambiguous, and might well refer to the process of natural emanation and reabsorption of the mandala deities.

Next we should look at Śāntigarbha, [See figure 2] the one who utters the praise. Who is he? Dalton begins his discussion by saying that rather little is known about Śāntigarbha, and then concludes that his uttering the praise here in IOL Tib J321 indicates how comparatively insignificant Padmasambhava must have been at that time: for had Padmasambhava been as significant then as now, it would not be appropriate for someone as inconsequential as Śāntigarbha to praise him. Dalton sums up his thinking in the following words: ‘From the perspective of the later Tibetan tradition, it is remarkable that the opinion of a relatively insignificant figure like Śāntigarbha would have any relevance for one with the stature of Padmasambhava’ (Dalton 2004: 768). This is surely one of those junctures at which Dalton has not related the Dunhuang text to its Mahāyoga ritual context, for in Mahāyoga myth and ritual, in what Dalton is referring to here as ‘the later Tibetan tradition’, Śāntigarbha is a very major name indeed, and not in any way relatively insignificant, precisely because he is considered in much of the hagiographical and ritual literature as one of Padmasambhava’s most important tantric gurus, as well as one of his closest spiritual colleagues. [See figure 3] A conclusion Dalton should have drawn is that these well-known contemporary structures of Mahāyoga narrative and ritual connecting Padmasambhava so closely with Śāntigarbha show interesting signs of already being adumbrated in some way in the Dunhuang texts, and this possibility needs further investigating. It should also be pointed out that if Śāntigarbha is his guru, or spiritual colleague of any sort, Padmasambhava being lavishly praised by him is not at all anomalous in the way Dalton suggests. In Mahāyoga thinking, even the greatest of gurus must of necessity have their own gurus, and gurus are always prone to praise their best disciples, especially if, as might be the implication here, the student’s realisation greatly exceeds that of the guru. Alternatively, Śāntigarbha might simply be praising Padmasambhava as a spiritual colleague. But which ever way one looks at it, we believe Dalton cannot be right in describing Śāntigarbha as relatively insignificant, and if only Dalton had studied the ritual record as well as the historiographical

---

17 The principle of treasure revelation was quite probably known in Tibet at the time. The Tibetan version of the Pratyutpaddha-buddhasamuccaya-vasthitasamadhisutra, as cited by Kamalaśīla in his Bhavanākrama, has the revelation of treasure of this type as a main theme (the Chinese version is different and does not). It explains that the Buddha is the one who conceals the treasure scriptures, while the treasure revealer is a layman who has had the teaching imprinted on his mind in a previous life by the Buddha, and who in the future life is reawakened to them by encountering a reminder of them in a buried casket guarded by spirits. See Paul Harrison 1990, especially Chapter 13. References to treasure also occur in the Kriyā and Yogatantra genres, several texts from which were translated in the early period.
record, surely he would have come to a diametrically opposite conclusion. In later Mahāyoga ritual classification, Śāntigarbha is counted as one of the Rig ’dzin gyi slob dpon brgyad, the eight great vidyādhāras who are the Indian founding fathers of the Mahāyoga tradition. In later rNying ma literature, these eight vidyādhāras were the first recipients in this world of the eight main Mahāyoga yi dam deities, the bKa’ brgyad, at their initial revelation to the human realm by the dākini Las kyi dbang mo che in a cemetery south west of Bodhgaya. These eight deities are the main yi dam cycles of the rNying ma pa, and Nyang ral’s bDe gshegs ’dus pa, that huge and seminal early gter ma cycle, was built around them, as is the central doxographic structure of the Mahāyoga sections of the rNying ma’i rgyud ’bum itself. According to later legend, Padmasambhava was present alongside the Rig ’dzin gyi slob dpon brgyad in the cemetery when the bKa’ brgyad were revealed, as the first recipient of their transmissions from each of the Rig ’dzin gyi slob dpon brgyad in turn, so that Padma is himself sometimes counted as one of the eight. Thus the Rig ’dzin gyi slob dpon brgyad, Śāntigarbha included, are seen by the later tradition as Padmasambhava’s own tantric gurus, from whom he received his main tantric initiations. Like Padmasambhava, they are seen not as ordinary human beings, but as direct manifestations of the great tantric deities themselves, often said to reside mystically in the eight great cemeteries of India. [See figure 4] It is interesting that several of the names associated with the Rig ’dzin gyi slob dpon brgyad feature quite prominently in Dunhuang tantric texts: [1] Maṇjuśrīmitra in IOLTibJ331.1 and in IOLTibJ1774 [2] Prabhahasti (Pra be se) in PT44 (Cantwell and Mayer 2008: 60), [3] Śāntigarbha in IOLTibJ321; [4] Vimalamitra (Bye ma la mu tra, f.1) in IOLTibJ688 (on rosaries) and in IOLTibJ644; [5] Humkara (with Maṇjuśrīmitra, and Buddhagupta [= Buddhaguhya]) in IOLTibJ1774 (slob pon nl ’Bu ta kub ta dang / ShI rI Man ’ju dang/ Hung ka ra). This list is not exhaustive, and more such references might turn up. Clearly these figures were already seen in the Dunhuang texts as great masters, and it is important to recall that gNubs’ bSam gtan mig sgron also presented some of them in highly mythologised terms, including some stories that persist into the modern tradition. It is hard to assess how far back the mythologisation of these figures goes. As we know from contemporary history, charismatic religious figures of their type can often acquire mythologisation in their own lifetimes, let alone one or two centuries later, and yet such mythologies, once established, can persist for many centuries. It is therefore not inherently impossible that they were already seen by the authors of the Dunhuang texts in a general manner not utterly different from that of the later tradition, and, more pertinently to the current discussion, the evidence from IOL TibJ321 certainly invites us to investigate if Śāntigarbha was already seen as one of Padmasambhava’s gurus or tantric brethren.

To move away from rNying ma legend and into the more prosaic light of modern history, we can also say that Śāntigarbha is described in the preamble to the sole surviving witness of the ’Phang thang ma catalogue as the consecrator of bSam yas monastery. However, we are not entirely sure if this preamble was part of the original ’Phang thang ma or a slightly later addendum. Ā Śāntigarbha was also well known to Bu ston as a major imperial-period translator of Yogatantra texts, notably the influential Sarvadurgatiparīśodhanatejorājasya tathāgataśasya arhato samyaksaṃbuddhasya kalpanāma, a tantra concerned with post-mortem rites which played quite an important role in the conversion of Tibet.

can never be quite sure what its earliest versions said. But this from Dylan Esler, who is currently preparing a PhD on the bSam gtan mig sgron at Louvain, including an edition of the text as far as extant resources will permit: Chapter 6, 277: slob (277.5) dpon chen po byi ma la bod yul du ’da’ ba’i tshul bstan nas // rgya gar yul na ma ’das par bzhugs pa dang / padmo ’byung gnas gting srin po ’dul du (277.6) bzhud pa la sogs pa rgya gar gyi mkhas pa la grangs med na / mnga’ ris bod kyi rgyal kham su yang grangs med par rig ’dzin du gshigs so // ‘When the great master Vimalamitra revealed the manner of passing away in Tibet, he nevertheless continued to dwell in India, as if he had not passed away. Padmasambhava later departed to tame the rākṣasas. There are innumerable sages in India as well as in the mighty Tibetan empire who went to the [abode of] awareness-holders.’ And so on, regarding other great masters. Might gNubs’ reference to Padmasambhava departing to tame the rākṣasas adumbrate the Zangs mdog dpal ri or Camaradvipa mythology subsequently connected with Padmasambhava?

21 In the versions we have so far seen of Nyang ral’s Zangs gling ma as identified recently by Lewis Doney to represent most closely its early strata Zl3 (i.e. Zlh, Zli), Padmasambhava is certainly represented as going from one guru to another, in a list that includes many of the expected names of the Rig ’dzin gyi slob dpon brgyad, but Śāntigarbha is missing. His niche so familiar to modern readers from the Rin chen gter mdzod version of Zangs gling ma, is in Zl3 occupied by Rombuguhyadavacandra, who in these versions teaches Padmasambhava the Ngan sngags and the Drag sngags relating to the dharma protectors. In later versions of Zangs gling ma [e.g., Rin chen gter mdzod], Rombuguhyad teaches Padmasambhava the ’Jig rten mchod bstdod, while Śāntigarbha teaches Ngan sngags, as he does also in the bDud ’joms Chos byung (op. cit.).

22 See dKar chag ’phang thang ma/ sgra sbyor bam po gnyis pa (Mi rigs dpe skrun khang, Pe cin, 2003: Plate 2, f.1v.6-7; p.2: rgya gar gyi slob dpon bsam yas kyi rab gnas mkhan sham ting gar bha). We discuss these issues at greater length in Cantwell and Mayer, 2012.
The next Dunhuang text we must look at is PT307. Dalton has already written on this at length (Dalton 2004), and made some excellent observations, but as we have pointed out elsewhere (see Cantwell and Mayer 2009: 296 ff, and also Cantwell and Mayer 2010), we feel he also misconstrued some of the evidence and came to mistaken conclusions. To recapitulate our arguments in brief, we made a clear identification of PT307 as the earliest known evidence for the ubiquitous rNying ma rite of the brTan ma bcu gnyis. PT307 describes Padmasambhava and Rlang dPal gyi seng ge binding by oath and administering samaya water to seven goddesses, whom Dalton had identified as a Tibetan version of the Indian Saptamātryākā, even though Dalton also remarked that some had the same names as the modern brTan ma goddesses. Yet although they are seven in number, and therefore might at first glance be expected to coincide with the category of Ma mo mched bdun, whose name is a Tibetan equivalent of Saptamātryākā, as Ehrhard has already pointed out, the names and other characteristics of the PT307 deities do not in fact seem to coincide with the Ma mo mched bdun (Ehrhard 2008: 15ff). As we discuss elsewhere (Cantwell and Mayer 2010: 298), PT307 seems instead to indicate a prototype of the brTan ma bcu gnyis category. This hypothesis is supported by two pieces of evidence. [1] We have located within later listings of the brTan ma all but one of the names found in PT307: in PT307 each goddess has two names, but in later texts the two names are taken as two separate goddesses, which accounts for the numerical discrepancy between the seven goddesses of PT307 and the twelve goddesses of the later brTan ma category. [2] The duo scenario, with Padmasambhava working in tandem specifically with Rlang dpal gyi seng ge, is typical of numerous later rNying ma brTan ma rituals. In numerous modern brTan ma bcu gnyis rituals, of which we gave several examples (Cantwell and Mayer 2009:299), it is typically exactly the same scenario that is enacted: with the specific assistance of his famous disciple Rlang dPal gyi seng ge, Padmasambhava binds the brTan ma goddesses by oath and makes them take the samaya water. We argued that PT307 thus provides strong evidence that early versions of, or prototypes for, the well known brTan ma bcu gnyis rituals were already existent at the time PT307 was written, and that these rituals were then (as now) indicative of Padmasambhava veneration.

Dalton however came to diametrically the opposite conclusion: unaware of its striking continuities with the modern brTan ma bcu gnyis rituals, he argued instead that PT307 was quite discontinuous with the modern rNying ma tradition and 23 Nevertheless, as we also pointed out, deities of this sort, their lo rgyus texts, and their classifications, are typically quite protean, especially in the hands of a creative gter ston, so that further secondary permutations of the narrative and secondary associations with later categories can also emerge.

---

moreover disproved the existence of Padmasambhava veneration, primarily because it juxtaposed Padmasambhava with Rlang dPal gyi seng ge. He summed up his reasoning as follows:

‘The presence of such an obscure figure [as Rlang dpal gyi Seng ge] alongside Padmasambhava is unusual. In later traditions Padmasambhava stands in a class by himself, as the lone conqueror of Tibet’s local spirits during the imperial period. PT 307 suggests that Padmasambhava’s role in the establishment of Buddhism in Tibet may have expanded over time, so as to eclipse others (notably a native Tibetan) acting around him. In the Tibetan imagination, Tibet’s pre-Buddhist landscape required the expertise of a foreigner to tame it. The important role played by a native Tibetan was inconsistent with later narratives and so was forgotten.’ (Dalton 2004: 768).

It seems to us his argument took insufficient consideration of the explicitly ritual nature of PT307 and its striking continuities with the modern ritual tradition, and was moreover based on two self-evidently mistaken assumptions that he made: firstly, that Padmasambhava was in later tradition usually portrayed alone in action, unsupported by any surrounding manṭḍala of disciples; and secondly, that Rlang dPal gyi seng ge was an obscure person whose involvement in taming these goddesses was largely forgotten by later tradition. On the contrary, Padmasambhava is normally shown surrounded by his disciples in the great majority of later ritual narratives and visualisations, while Rlang dPal gyi seng ge is extremely well known to the later tradition, both through his recurring presence in the brTan ma bcu gnyis rites, and even more so, through his ubiquitous classification as one of Padmasambhava’s closest disciples. Rlang dPal gyi seng ge is in fact regularly counted among the famous category of Padmasambhava’s twenty-five main disciples (rje ‘bang nyer lnga), among whom he was famous for his control over Tibet’s local spirits.24 [See figures 4, 5 and 6]

24 Although wrongly describing Rlang dpal gyi seng ge as obscure, Dalton does nevertheless correctly connect him to the deity ‘Jig rten mchod bstod, one of the deities he is indeed often associated with. But without citing any source, Dalton then inaccurately describes ‘Jig rten mchod bstod as one of three mundane deities that were tamed by Padmasambhava (ibid 768). This is a misunderstanding of the traditional rNying ma Mahāyoga category of the ‘Jigs rten pa’i sde gsum, or the Three Deities of the Mundane, of which ‘Jig rten mchod bstod is one. Far from being mundane beings in themselves, these three deities are in fact classified as members of the exalted bKa’ brgyad described immediately above in our discussion of the Eight Great Vidyādhāras, the other five being the Five Wisdom Deities, or ye shes kyi lha Inga. Despite the distinction, both categories are equally considered to be aspects of Heruka, albeit the one category conferring wisdom and the other category conferring protection. So, despite the ostensibly worldly-sounding name, ‘Jigs rten mchod bstod is normatively seen as a form of Buddhist Heruka, a yi dam in his own right, who protects the Dharma by coercing local spirits. Thus ‘Jigs rten mchod bstod is not himself a mundane deity tamed by Padmasambhava, as Dalton believes. Quite the reverse, he is an important form of Heruka, an aspect of enlightenment with which Padmasambhava yogically identified himself, or manifested himself as, in order to PT44: Padma tames the bSe goddesses and appoints them phur srung

The best-known Dunhuang text on Padmasambhava is PT44. PT44 has been studied a number of times already, and there is no need to repeat what is already known. However, as we have already pointed out elsewhere, just as with PT307, we were unconvinced that the ritual context and nature of PT44 had yet been adequately appreciated by previous scholars. In brief, we argued that like PT307, PT44 includes a smrang or rabs-like narrative that nowadays persists intact within the phur pa lo rgyus texts. This narrative describes Padmasambhava bringing the phur pa tantras from Nālandā, comprehensively redacting them to extract the practice systems he wanted, above all taming the bSe goddesses at Yang le shod and appointing them the guardians of the phur pa tradition (phur srung), and then successfully transmitting the phur pa teachings to Tibet. In particular, PT44 includes the earliest known witness to the section of the phur pa lo rgyus that nowadays underpins the practice of the phur srung or phur pa protectors, who play a small but integral role in most of the general rNying ma protector liturgies for daily recitation, and who of course play a much more central role in the Vajrakīla sadhanas.

So, since PT44 is like PT307 clearly a text created with ritual in mind, it follows that Padmasambhava was at the time of its composition already mythologised, already integrated into several ritual structures. This, in turn, implies that he was not seen as an ordinary teacher, but rather as a person of exceptional tantric power, since most gurus do not so easily become such a prominent part of general tantric rituals. Tantric gurus are of course revered by their own circle of disciples, although the evolution of the formal practices now known as guru-yoga is not yet understood. Even today, such guru-yogas need not be full tantric practices, and need not require empowerment, tame the mundane deities. Hence rNying ma pa tradition maintains that it was by practising this yi dam, taught him by Padmasambhava, that Rlang dpal gyi seng ge came in turn to be served by the local spirits of Tibet (which perhaps helps explain his uniquely prominent presence in the brTan ma rites). The same general principles apply to the other two of the Three Deities of the Mundane, namely Ma mo rbod gtong and dMod pa drag sngags: they too are not considered mundane deities tamed by Padmasambhava, but rather, enlightened forms of Heruka by which Padmasambhava tamed mundane deities. Our thanks to Changling Rinpoche and especially Gyurme Dorje for their detailed and learned exegeses of these issues.

25 For the most recent study of the contents of PT44 and our re-analysis of the material, see Cantwell and Mayer 2009, and 2008: 41-68. The previous study of its first section was Kapstein 2000: 158-159. Wangdu and Diemberger, without citing their evidence, try to describe PT44 as a dynastic source (Wangdu and Diemberger 2000: 13). Yet from their purely codicological analyses, Takeuchi 2004 and Akagi 2011 have dated PT44 to the second half of the tenth century, thus contradicting Wangdu and Diemberger, but supporting A.M. Blondeau’s tentative dating of it in her famous 1980 article on Padmasambhava’s biographies. Finally, the first published study of PT44 was, as far as we are aware, F.A. Bischoff and Charles Hartman 1971.

26 As we pointed out in our previous publications, both texts are quite explicit about their ritual natures and intentions, but this can be missed if one approaches these texts merely to extract particular passages.
although they sometimes do if done in a more elaborated form. However, Padma is in PT307 and PT44 seemingly integrated into rituals that are not guru-yoga, but much more generic, which could form part of almost any elaborate tantric practices of the Mahāyoga and Anuyoga types linked to yi dam, tshogs and protector rituals. They therefore form a part of general tantric practice, not the guru-yoga of a single master and hence not necessarily the province merely of a narrow circle of devotees. This is striking because, in what we have read so far from Dunhuang, we are not yet aware of any other tantric masters becoming integrated into any tantric ritual of any kind. As far as we can see from our readings so far, not even Vimalamitra, Mañjuśrīmitra, Hūṃkarā, or Śāntigarbha get such treatment in their several mentions among the Dunhuang texts. It is true that in PT44 and PT307, some of Padma’s entourage also get a mention, but they only appear because they are members of his entourage and recipients of the transmission he gives, and would surely not otherwise have featured. So, Padmasambhava’s insertion as main protagonist into tantric rituals which are not even his own guru-yoga seems to make him ritually more prominent than his contemporaries. In a similar vein, IOLTibJ321 affords Padma a mythic status as a source of tantric dharma not given to Śāntigarbha, and not in fact matched by any other named figure in the Dunhuang tantric literature, as far as we are aware. By the same token, if future research can show that other named gurus within Dunhuang’s proto-rNying ma tantric literature are, in fact, incorporated into ritual in just such a way, then of course our hypothesis could be falsified.

The second point we made concerns the quality of Padmasambhava’s ritual deeds as described in PT44. According to as yet undated but probably old testimony from the rNying ma’i rgyud ’bum, these were not routine yogic acts. Padmasambhava did not merely tame the bSe goddesses in a conventional manner, or merely establish some kind of ritual tradition. More than that, with these legendary deeds Padma actually brought the bSe goddesses into the official rNying ma pantheon for the first time and thereby introduced significant textual innovation into the actual canonical tantras themselves. After this moment in mythic time, the canonical rNying ma tantras began to include within their chapters rites for and descriptions of these bSe goddesses that Padmasambhava had tamed. To have such an impact on the canonical tantras is not the kind of thing an ordinary guru could do, and once again it shows Padma as someone of particular importance to tantric literary tradition. Thus, in some later rituals, but not all, the goddesses now appear as wisdom deities within the main maṇḍala, and hence on the initiation cards currently widely used in the Dudjom tradition (apparently printed in Taiwan).27

27 In the gNam lcags spu gri as redacted by bDud 'joms Jigs bral ye shes rdo rje, the goddesses are said to be placed in the surrounding courtyard of the main maṇḍala (a courtyard outside the inner cemetery palace but within the great gzhal yas khang or immeasurable palace), so that in short, they can be considered to have become part of the main tantric deity’s wisdom display (gnam lcags spu gri las byang Volume Tha: 105; gnam lcags spu gri bsnyen yig Volume Da:
They seem clearly to be enjoined in the \textit{rTsa ba’i dum bu}, the brief \textit{phur pa} text that Sa skya Panḍita included into the Kanjur, and which we have good reason to believe is very old indeed. A number of lines of the \textit{rTsa ba’i dum bu} invoke a series of divine helpers for the rites, and three of these lines use the well-established names for the three groups of protective goddesses of which the \textit{bSe} goddesses—\textit{sa bdag chen mo}—are one. The commentary by A myes zhabs (p.396) is explicit that the recitation indeed refers to these goddesses.\footnote{A myes zhabs’ work is not specifically a commentary on the \textit{rTsa ba’i dum bu} but rather on the \textit{Phur chen} practice. However, this \textit{sādhanā} incorporates the \textit{rTsa ba’i dum bu}, so the traditional Sa skya interpretations of the words are clear: “Furthermore, by reciting that the time has come for the four \textit{bse} queens, who are Great Earth Mistresses, emanating as the female offspring of Rudra’s mistress, the earth mistresses are enjoined” \textit{(yang ru tra’i byi mo sras mor sprul ba’i sa bdag chen mo/ bse’i rgyal mo bzhi’i dus la bab ces pas sa bdag ma rnams bskul/,’Jam-mgon A-myes-zhabs, Ngag-dbang-kun-dga’-bsod-nams 1973: p.396.)}} However, a lengthier witness for this canonical inclusion of the \textit{bSe} goddesses is a famous tantra called the \textit{Phur pa bcu gnyis}, in which the \textit{bSe} are indicated clearly in chapters thirteen, fifteen and nineteen as an integral part of the tantra itself (see also Mayer 1996: 128-132). A \textit{Phur pa bcu gnyis} is mentioned in Dunhuang,\footnote{The Dunhuang version of the \textit{Thabs kyi zhags pa} commentary refers both to a \textit{ki la ya bcu gnyis} and a \textit{phur pa bcu gnyis} (IOL Tib J 321: f.64v, 70v).} so we know it is quite an old title. The \textit{Phur pa bcu gnyis} is one the \textit{rGyud bco brgyad} or Eighteen Main Tantras of Mahāyoga, and hence doxographically situated at the very doctrinal and historical core of rNying ma Mahāyoga; for not only are these eighteen tantras traditionally defined as the main root texts of all Mahāyoga, but in addition they are the ones most frequently cited and witnessed at Dunhuang. Sadly, only two out of the eighteen tantras have left us complete witnesses at Dunhuang, namely the \textit{Thabs zhags} that we have just discussed and the \textit{Guhyasamāja}, but what is striking about those two is the fact that their texts have remained virtually unchanged to this day. Unfortunately, we cannot be sure if the same was true of the \textit{Phur pa bcu gnyis}. We have as yet no way of knowing if the \textit{Phur pa bcu gnyis} cited in TibJ321 had the same text in the tenth century that it has today. If, however, it did resemble the \textit{Thabs zhags} and the \textit{Guhyasamāja} in remaining historically stable, then by the time the Dunhuang cave was closed it will have already included its sections on the \textit{bSe}, who were first tamed by Padmasambhava at Yang le shod.

Unfortunately, it is unlikely we will ever get direct evidence for the state of the \textit{Phur pa bcu gnyis} in the tenth century. We have critically edited its text, but so far...
bifidity prevents the reconstruction of an archetype. Nevertheless, we can say that all extant versions do include an indication of the bSe goddesses, so there is a good likelihood that they were present in the earliest ancestor of the extant texts. Conversely, the title Phur pa bcu gnyis has been applied to more than one text, so it is not impossible that today’s version is different from the one envisaged in the tenth century. Nevertheless, we can say with certainty that PT44 is the earliest known version of the part of the phur pa lo rgyus that underpins the practice of the Phur pa protectors, and that a well-developed phurpa ritual and scriptural tradition was undoubtedly attested at Dunhuang. It is therefore prudent to put forward as a hypothesis for testing that Padmasambhava might here once again be associated with the act of canonical innovation, as we think he might have been with the Thabs zhags. At the very least, we can be certain from PT44 that the flourishing Phur pa literature evidenced at Dunhuang took ‘Sambhaba’ as the founder of their practice lineage, tamer and appointer of their protector deities, and possibly even the redactor of their tantric scriptures. Perhaps it is these factors that might have combined over time to make him a more important ritual figure than his colleagues: as we have argued else where, Padmasambhava’s rise in Tibet is in no small part connected to the rise of Mahāyoga. Finally, we should briefly observe that Padmasambhava’s inclusion in rituals as we find in PT44 and PT307 raises very interesting questions about tantric ritual as a whole, which we cannot approach here. However, were Indian gurus ever integrated into rituals in quite this way, or is this a Tibetan innovation?

Padma in the Testament of Ba

For the final part of this article, we must briefly revisit the Testament of Ba narratives. Like most Tibetan historical literature, these are composite texts reconstructed out of often pre-existing parts. We cannot yet know very much about how old the various parts are, but thanks to van Schaik, we know that at least some fragments of these texts exist among the Dunhuang finds. The Testament of Ba narratives have sometimes been cited as evidence that Padmasambhava was widely considered a less than major figure when these texts were written. This is surely inaccurate: both texts portray Padmasambhava as a preeminent tantric, so that a better inference might simply be that devotional extravagances linked to Mahāyoga’s pure vision practices (e.g bKa’ thang hagiographies such as O rgyan gling pa’s) were probably not yet current as a literary genre when the earliest strata of the Testament of Ba were written—but even if they were, an avowedly historical text such as the Testament of Ba would hardly be the place for them anyway. Yet all versions of the Testament of Ba unequivocally

30 See Mayer 1996.
32 The dBa’ bzhide refers to itself as a bKa’ mchid (royal discourse), while the sBa bzhide refers to itself as a bKa’ gtsigs (royal edict). Both titles thereby indicate that their proper context is the sphere of state, not the sphere of religious devotion or ritual.
show Padmasambhava as a unique and extraordinary being. The dBa’ bzhed is usually considered the earliest. In the dBa’ bzhed narrative, Padma is invited by the Emperor at Śāntarakṣīta’s instigation; the latter describes him as the most powerful tāntrika in India. When in Tibet, Padma demonstrates spectacular miracles and shows unequalled mastery over local deities and spirits, including the politically potent deity Thang lha, whom he binds by oath to serve the dharma. Padma demonstrates so much magic power that the Emperor panics, and humbly circumambulates Padma, respectfully offers him many bags of gold, and begs him to go home. But Padma is disdainful. He picks up a sleeveful of sand from the ground, and instantly turns that into gold, revealing his total mastery over mundane appearances. Terrified of the awesome power of the foreigner, thinking he could seize the state if he wished, the Tibetan ministers now try to kill him by stealth, even though he is on his way home. But Padma has miraculous insight, and knows without being told exactly what is in store. When the time comes, he makes the twenty assassins lying in ambush freeze like figures in a painting, and just walks by. Being compassionate, he revives his would-be murderers as soon as it is safe to do so, but sorrowfully foresees that, although Tibet will never be threatened by non-Buddhists, its own Buddhist communities will fight amongst themselves. The Emperor for his part is miserable at the sorry way things turned out between himself and Padma. How are we to assess this narrative? Wangdu and Diemberger approach it in a perhaps slightly un-nuanced fashion: since it does not show the devotional extravagances of the later bKa’ thang literature, they conclude it shows ‘a Padma shorn of his familiar glamour’.

We do not think they expressed themselves exactly correctly. In fact, it is not Padma himself who is shown lacking in glamour, but rather the language describing him; it is not yet couched in the devotional extravagances connected with tantric pure vision that later readers have become habituated to, in the wake of the well-known bKa’ thang hagiographies. Nor of course is the Empire portrayed in the dBa’ bzhed as rNying ma tantrism’s “golden age” presided over by a predestined Emperor who is Padmasambhava’s preeminent disciple and an emanation of Mañjuśrī, as we find in the writings of Nyang ral, who believed himself to be Khri Srong de’u btsan’s reincarnation (Doney 2011:140ff). But when it comes to tantric accomplishment or siddhis, the author(s) of these passages of the dBa’ bzhed put Padma very firmly in a class of his own. No one else in the dBa’ bzhed shows anything like such mighty powers. Surely such mighty powers, from the greatest tāntrika of India, were glamorous enough to post-Imperial Tibetans! In short, the nature of the language and several of the narrative episodes might differ substantially from the later hagiographies with their historical triumphalism, but Padma is certainly here portrayed as an extraordinary being.

Above all, we must not forget that the dBa’ bzhed is attempting to create and preserve an historical record. While it surely integrates material from the tantric religious sources, it can be considered a rather different category of literature, so we would not expect the same kind of language to be used. Anne-Marie Blondeau (1980) has described how the traditional narratives of Padmasambhava exist in parallel and complementary ‘womb-birth’ (mngal skyes) and ‘miraculous birth’ (rdzus skyes) versions, and she mentions Kong sprul’s association of the ‘womb-birth’ accounts with the bKa’ ma rather than the gTer ma, and in particular, with the Phur pa transmission accounts (phur pa’i lo rgyus). Blondeau suggests that the account given in the Testament of Ba is more commensurable with the traditional bKa’ ma transmission of the ‘womb-birth’ version of Padmasambhava’s life. Thus, to make a comparison with Nyang ral’s familiar hagiography, which is the source for the ‘miraculous birth’ version, or with the even more elaborated bKa’ thangs, would be to miss the point (Blondeau 1980:48).

---

In fact, we can go further than Blondeau, and suggest that one would need caution also in over-interpreting contrasts between an account such as the dBa’ bzhed, seeking to report historical events, and the traditional mythological stories of Padmasambhava found in the context of religious transmissions, whether of the ‘womb-birth’ or of the ‘miraculous birth’ type. The ‘womb-birth’ stories found in the transmission of the Phur pa teachings are not only integrated with the ‘miraculous birth’ accounts, but they are embedded within tantric deity teachings and practices, in which their presentation by the guru on any specific occasion is designed to generate guru devoilation and a pure vision (dag snang) of all phenomena as the tantric maṇḍala.
Thus, like the ‘miraculous birth’ accounts, the stories are highly symbolic and connected with the tantric imagery, and so do not necessarily represent a more ‘rationalist’ strand of thinking. For example, Sog bzlog pa Blo gros rgyal mtshen’s Phur pa lo rgyus forms part of the cycle of texts for the Rong zom Phur pa tradition.
Its focus on a ‘womb-birth’ may be seen as expressing a Mahāyoga visionary perspective equating the physical body with the tantric deity. In this account, the Guru is born in a physical body which is none other than the Phur pa deity and his maṇḍala: his waist is a knot like the middle section of a phur pa ritual implement, his lower body triangular in shape, again like the phur pa, while his hair is reddish brown like that of the Phur pa deity, and his eyes and mouth are semi-circular, thus resembling the three semi-circular shapes outlined by a circle around the central triangle in many Phur pa maṇḍalas.

34 See her well-known article, Blondeau 1980. While Wangdu and Diemberger do cite this article, yield no clear sign of having considered this point in their analysis. As Blondeau points out, we do not know exactly when the formalizing of the distinction between ‘womb-birth’ and ‘miraculous birth’Padmasambhava biographies began. But we do know that the categories of ‘womb-birth’ and ‘miraculous birth’ derive from the abhidharma, and we also know that both types of Padmasambhava narratives share a very long parallel history in Tibet.
35 dpal rdo rje phur pa’i lo rgyus ngo mtshar rgya mtsho’i rba rlabs.
36 The full description: “Called, Śāntarakṣita, (he) had a complexion of white with (a tinge) of red, the sign of the Lotus family, and his head perfected every wondrous ability. His waist was a Bum pa nag po, a major source for all the Phur pa bKa’ ma transmissions, the accounts of the two types of birth are given together (bDud ’joms bKa’ ma version, Volume Tha: 221-225; Boord 2002: 113-115). First, the ‘womb-birth’ is presented, with a slightly different version of the features of the Guru’s body from Sog bzlog pa’s, equally replete with potent tantric symbolism, and then there is a variant of the same story of his early years which is given in the following ‘miraculous birth’ story. The two accounts merge for the Guru’s later deeds. A myes zhabs’ Phur pa lo rgyus, given within his commentary on the Sa skya Phur pa practice, also discusses the two types of birth together. He draws a rather Levi-Straussian symbolic opposition between the two. In this case, the womb birth is said to have taken place in the eastern region of the country of Zahor, while the miraculous birth took place in the western region of the country of Urgyan, so that the residents of the two both held the Guru to be the son of their King. He stresses that there is no contradiction, since both types of birth are examples of an inconceivable array of enlightened emanations which accord with the beings to be tamed.

In contrast to the traditional lo rgyus accounts which remain part of the contemporary religious transmission, it is unclear how to assess the Padma sections of the dBa’ bzhed, since we do not yet know who wrote them or when. To our imagination, some parts of them invoke a moment in the time of fragments (sil bu’i dus), when aristocrats were beginning to articulate a fading of hopes for the old centralised imperial ways, and reinvent themselves as independent princely tantric lineage holders, even while engaged in civil wars that pitched Buddhist against Buddhist. But what is clear is that Padma is shown here as the mythic role model for aspiring aristocratic lay mantrins. Described by Šântarakṣita as the greatest mantra adept in India, he can turn dirt to knot, his upper body shaped to go inwards, while his lower body was triangular. His mouth and eyes were semi-circles, and his hair was reddish brown. (He was thus) born as one disfigured, (but) endowed with the phurpa’s characteristics.” (śānta rakṣi ta bya ba kha do dkar la dmarr ba’i mdangs dang ldan pas padma’i rigs kyi mtshan dang ldan zhiṅ/ sgyu rtsal thams cad rdzogs pa mgo dang sked pa rgya mdud/ ro stod bcum gzhogs/ ro smad zur gsum/ kha dan mig zla gam/ skra kham pa ste/ mi sdug pa phur pa’i mtshan nyid can zhiṅ skyes so/, p.12)

37 A myes zhabs, bCom ldan ’das rdo rje gzhon nu’i gdam pa nyams len gyi chu bo chen po sgrub pa’i thabs kyi rnam par bshad pa’ phrin las kyi pad mo rab tu rgyas pa’i nyin byed.

38 shar phyogs za hor gyi yul mngal skyes kyis ’dul bar gzigs nas/ grong khyer gzi brjid ldan zhes bya ba na/ yab rgyal po thor cog zhes bya ba la btsun mo gnyis yod pa las/ btsun mo nges ma zhes bya ba la sras thod gisug can zhes bya bar sku ’khrungs par bzhed/ brdzus skyes ltar na/ nub phyogs urygan gyi yul brdzus skyes kyis ’dul bar gzigs nas/ dhana ko sha’i gling du padma’i sdong po las brdzus te ’khrungs par bzhed/ de ltar mngal skyes dang brdzus skyes kyi lo rgyus mi ’dra ba las/ shar phyogs za hor ba dang/ nub phyogs urygan ba gnyis mi mthun te/ za hor pa na re/ slob dpon padma nged kyi rgyal po’i sras yin/ mngal skyes yin zhes zer/ urygan pa na re nged kyi rgyal po’i sras yin brdzus skyes yin zhes zer te/ sprul pa’i bkod pa yin pas gnyis ka bden pa yin te/...’ dir gang la gang ’dul du sprul pa’i bkod pa bsam gysis m khypa pa bstan pa yin pas/ de’i yon tan gyi rnam par thar pa phyogs re tsam mthong ba la brten nas/ lo rgyus ’chad tshul mi ’dra ba rnam s byung ba yin te/ gang ltar yang ’gal ba med do (A myes zhabs: 33-34).
gold, foresee the future, know the minds of others, bind Tibet’s deities under oath with all the political implications of that, and contemptuously withstand anything the old Tibetan Empire can throw at him. In addition, he is kind, compassionate and wise. This is no ordinary guru. Undoubtedly the dBa’ bzhed account is consistent with the existence of a powerful Padma mythology at the time it was written; and even if we cannot yet be sure of the age of these strata of the dBa’ bzhed, its Padma narratives do seem to have archaic features that differ from the later ones. So our conclusion is that while it seems that Nyang ral so creatively gave a new devotional, narrative and literary shape to the Padma cult in Tibet, we must also be aware of the extent to which Nyang ral was also building on themes already present, rather than merely inventing something largely new, as Dalton’s interpretation of the Dunhuang sources might lead one to conclude.

Postscript

Finally, we must return to our initial caveat that the evidence is complex and inconsistent. For example, we have no evidence of Padma from Sanskrit sources, which could (but need not) indicate that he did not have much of a profile in India.39

39 We probably have no record of Padma from Indian sources, unless we are to believe the doubtful story that Buddhagupta’s testimony to Tāranātha really referred to a trace of the Padmasambhava tradition surviving in sixteenth century Konkan. How are we to interpret this dearth of traces from India? We put this question to an Indological colleague in Oxford, Mr. Péter-Dániel Szántó of Merton College. His extended response was as follows: while we can surmise that heruka type texts were being produced in the late eighth century in the wake of the Sarvabuddhasamāyoga, nowadays it is hard to put a name to a single author of them. In other words, most of the major figures of the genre from that period remain difficult to identify today. There are a number of known Guhyasamāja authors, like Padmavajra who wrote the Guhyasiddhi, but Guhyasamāja is slightly older and more respectable, and both its Ārya and Jñānapada traditions of exegesis have as central deity a buddha or bodhisattva form rather than a kāpālika style heruka. Unless he is later, as many now think, we might have Vilāsavajra, to whom is attributed a commentary on *Guhyagarbha, but his authorship of this commentary is often seen as doubtful, and he is anyway probably largely known because of his other works on the more exoteric Maṇjuśrīnāmasamgīti. There is Vilāsavajra’s reputed maternal uncle Agrabodhi, but Agrabodhi’s work was definitely not of the heruka type. Ānandagarbha did write a herukasādhanā based on the Buddhhasamāyoga, but many think he was from the ninth century, not the eighth. There are famous authors of the Yoga tantras, like Buddhaguhya, but these are not the same kind of tradition at all. There is Jñānapabandhu, but his work was on the Kriyā text, the Susiddhi, and does not contain heruka or kāpālika style esotericism. Šāntarakṣita’s Tattvasiddhi defends antinomian tantric practices, but Šāntarakṣita’s fame is undoubtedly rooted in his Madhyanamaka work, not in his passing comments on tantrism. Besides, as Ernst Steinkellner has shown, there are extremely serious doubts this text is by Šāntarakṣita at all. It is possible we may also have one Śriśāntipāda, disciple of Pālitepāda: the latter was perhaps the same as Jñānapāda’s teacher on the Konkan (bSrung ba’i zhab in Vaidyapāda’s narrative of Jñānapāda’s travels in his commentary to the well-known Mukhagama). Above all, we must be aware that only the names of authors survive, not the names of gurus. In other words, even if Padmasambhava had been Likewise, although gNubs chen Sangs rgyas ye shes’s bSam gtan mig sgron does mythologise Padma, mentioning his departure to tame the rākṣasas, it equally mythologises many others like Vimalamitra, and puts no special emphasis on Padma at all. In the bSam gtan mig sgron, Padma is clearly only one great teacher among many—such as Vimalamitra, Śrī Śimha, Mañjuśrīmitra, Buddhagupta/guhyā, dGa rab rdo rje, etc. Moreover, the bSam gtan mig sgron does not see Padmasambhava as a rDzogs chen teacher: he is cited only in connection with Mahāyoga and the Man ngag lta ’phreng (the bSam gtan mig sgron itself is largely connected with rDzogs chen).

We need to examine gNubs’s other works before we can be certain, but this surely suggests that Padma’s importance was at the time comparatively narrower, emphasised more in some tenth century contexts than others, perhaps largely in those connected with Phur pa and other Mahāyoga cycles rather than Atiyoga.40

---

40 Of course, PT44 speaks of all the yānas, and specifies atiyoga as well as the others. The later tradition that Phur pa integrates the yānas (this is also said in the Bum nag, see Boord: 138-142) seems suggested here, even if the Phur pa tantras are generally classified as Mahāyoga.
I. Bibliography

---

II. Tibetan sources

bKa’ ma shin tu rgyas pa (snga ’gyur bka’ ma) 120 volumes, published by Kah thog mkhan po ’jam dbyangs, Chengdu 1999. Scanned by the Tibetan Buddhist Resource Center, New York (W25983).

gNubs chen Sangs rgyas ye shes. sGom gyi gnad gsal bar phyed ba bsam gyan mig sgron (rnal ’byor mig gi bsam gyan or bSam gyan mig sgron: A treatise on bhāvanā and dhyāṇa and the relationships between the various approaches to Buddhist contemplative practice). Reproduced from a manuscript made presumably from an Eastern Tibetan print by ’Khor-gdong gter-sprul ’Chi-med rig-’dzin, Šmartsis shesrig spendzod, Volume 74, Leh: Tashigangpa, 1974. An electronic version is available from the Tibetan Buddhist Resource Centre (W00EGS1016286). The text is also reprinted in the bKa’ ma shin tu rgyas pa (see above) vol. phe, 104: 573-1077, Chengdu, 1999.

Sa skya Phur chen. dPal rdo rje gjhon nu sggrub pa’i thabs bklaṅs pas don grub, by Sa skya pa bSod nams rgyal mtshan (1312-1375), dPal sa skya’i chos tshogs, Rajpur, India (Tibetan date given: 992). (Note that two different electronic editions of the Sa skya Phur chen are now available. One is included in vol. 18 of the dpal chen kī la ya’i chos skor phyogs bsgrigs [si khrön zhiṅ chen mi rigs zhiṅ ’jug su’o, bod kyi shes rig zhiṅ ’jug khang, khrung tu’u 2002 (http://tbrc.org/#library_work_Object-W24051), p.137ff, and one included in the rGyud sde kun btus, vol. 16. This itself has two available versions: Lungtok & Gyaltsan, Delhi 1971-1972 (TBRC W21295), p. 427-505; and Sachen International, Kathmandu 2004 (TBRC W27883), p.479-568. Both are apparently based on the Derge blocks, although the Sachen International version is an entirely remade computer input version edition rather than a photographic reproduction.

Sog bzlog pa Blo gros rgyal mtshan. dPal rdo rje phur pa’i lo rgyus ngo mtshar rgya mtsho’i rba rlabs, version from the bDud ’joms Bka’ ma: Rñin ma Bka’ ma rgyas pa (see above), vol. n. y: 116.

A myes zhab. ’Jam-mgon A-myes-zhab, Ngag-dbang-kun-dga’-bsod-nams: bCom ldan ’das rdo rje gjhon nu’i gdams pa nyams len gyi chu bo chen po sgrub pa’i thabs kyi rnam par bshad pa’ phrin las kyi pad mo rab tu rgyas pa’i nyin byed, published in, ’Khon lugs Phur pa’i rnam bṣad, ’Chams yig brjed byaṅ, The Vajrakīla rites as practiced by the ’Khon Lineage of Sa-skya, reproduced from manuscript copies of the ancient Sa-skya xylographic prints by Ngawang Sopa, New Delhi, 1973 (TBRC W30340). [It is also available as vol. 8 of TBRC W29307.]
Figure 1: Padma rGyal po, as depicted in the Ritual Dance of the Guru’s Eight Aspects (gu ru mtshan brgyad 'chams), Jangsa Monastery, Kalimpong, 2009. (Photo by Cathy Cantwell.)
Figure 2: Śāntigarbha [shan ting gar pa’] from a modern set of the Eight Vidyādharas (courtesy of Rigpa Shedra Wiki (rigpawiki.org) and in an initiation card set from the 12-13th century (as established by carbon dating and style (item n. 737, courtesy of Rubin Musem; the writing on the back of this card clearly specifies Śāntigarbha).
Figure 3: Padma in the wrathful form of rDo rje 'gro bo lod, with his Guru Śāntigarbha sitting above, centre. From Yeshe Tsogyal 1978 Part II: 437, Plate 30 (Courtesy of Dharma Publishing).
Figure 4: Padmasambhava with the Eight Great Vidyādharaś overhead

Śāntigarbha is one of the stylised Eight Great Vidyādharaś, shown in the circle around Padmasambhava (he is second from the right). Detail from a thangka of the Rig ’dzin ’dus pa, the most popular of contemporary Padmasambhava rites, revealed by ’Jigs med gling pa (1729-1798). The very name of this sādhanā refers to the Eight Great Vidyādharaś. Rlang dPal gyi seng ge is also represented, possibly in the second row from the bottom at the extreme right, as one of the twenty five leading disciples of Padmasambhava(rje ’bangs nyer Inga) (Thanks to the Maha Siddha Nyingma Center (mahasiddha.org), who, despite their disagreement with the tenor of this article, graciously allowed the use of their illustration on condition that it be treated with respect.)
Figure 5: Padmasambhava’s wrathful form of Šeng ge sgra sgros, with his disciple Rlang dPal gyi seng ge below right. From Yeshe Tsogyal 1978 Part II: 439, Plate 31 (Courtesy of Dharma Publishing.)
Figure 6: Detail of figure 5 above, showing Rlang dPal gyi seng ge taming Tibetan deities. From Yeshe Tsogyal 1978 Part II: 439, Plate 31 (Courtesy of Dharma Publishing.)